The audience at the Lyceum Theatre next Tuesday night will see a much transformed Ethel Barrymore. The actress has lost thirty pounds and she is said to be quite the Ethel Barrymore of earlier years in looks. But more different will be the character of her performance. She was last seen here in a serious play which Dario Nicodemi wrote for Gabrielle Rejane. Now she is to be seen in what might have been a play for May Irwin. The complete difference in Miss Barrymore's looks and her play since her last appearance here has never been exceeded in the case of any actress.

Marie Dressler has turned from laugh Marie Dressler has turned from laugh making to vote making—temporarily, of course. At the Gedney Farms Hotel, near White Plains, where the actress is resting after a strenuous season forcing laughs from pessimists, she has won over more than fifty male guests to the cause of woman suffrage.
